Face, brain development tightly linked, study finds

Researchers at Stanford and KU Leuven have identified more than 70 genes that affect variation in both brain and facial structure. The genes don't influence cognitive ability, further debunking beliefs that intelligence can be assessed by facial features.

Biochemist Robert Baldwin dies at 93

Baldwin propelled leaps in scientists' understanding of how proteins assemble themselves into the three-dimensional shapes that are essential to their function.

Pro Tips

- Entry summaries are sourced from page properties
- Use with a News Page template, otherwise there is no publication date to choose from
- Can be used with non-News Page templates, but be sure to change the sorting option
- Like the News List component, but want to source articles outside of AEM? Try the External News List, or Feed components
